

BERETTA'S FIRST .45 ACP AUTO PISTOL!

FIRST LOOK!

SHOOTING TIMES

AUGUST 1998
Reloading The .44 Special
& .44 Magnum

New S&Ws

- 10mm Classic Hunter
- .357 Magnum Mountain Gun
- 1911-Style .45 Auto Pistol

Win The Hunt Of A Lifetime!

Why The Bolt Action Is Best

Troubleshooting Auto Pistol Magazines

EXCLUSIVE!
NEW LASER
RANGE-FINDERS

SHOOTING TIMES AUG
$3.50 US/$3.95 CAN

THE SHOOTIST

MIKE VENTURINO

Peacemaker Specialists: Specializing In Colt SAA Restoration & Modification

During the first pre-1900s course held at Thunder Ranch in December 1996, I ended up shooting beside a fellow named Eddie Janis. Janis and I have talked to each other occasionally on the phone during the past few years, but this was our first meeting in person. Before the firing started he impressed me with his sense of humor, calm demeanor, and friendliness. But then when we started the live firing exercises, he further impressed me with the marksmanship he displayed with a Colt Single Action Army .45. No matter how we shot, one handed, two handed, or with weak hand only, most of his bullets cut a ragged hole in the target.

You may not have heard of Janis, but perhaps you are familiar with the name of his business, Peacemaker Specialists. As the name implies, Janis is focused on only the Colt SAA revolver, and what he offers shooters in regards to that handgun is impressive.

Peacemaker Specialists operates as a collector's restoration service, a parts supplier, and a gunsmithing service for the cowboy action shooter. Janis said, "Catering to both collectors and shooters keeps us thinking on two different levels. Their needs are not the same."

In a restoration project, authenticity is the watchword at Peacemaker Specialists. The hammer's knurling must match the vintage of the Colt, as must the barrel's lettering and caliber marking. Even the shape of the firing pin has changed several times from era to era in the Colt SAA's 125-year history.

Services For Collectors

The services offered for collectors range from small things like rebuilding a hammer's broken halfcock notch on an otherwise pristine gun to complete restorations starting with only a frame. The options offered include but are not limited to: color-casehardening main frames; rust blueing all other parts; fitting new cylinders, barrels, and internals to match the gun's vintage; and even having replacement stocks of the correct type fitted to the grip frame. Doing this sort of work not only requires exceptional craftsmanship abilities in the gunsmith, but detailed knowledge of the Colt's long and varied history is also necessary.

Something I was glad to hear Janis say was that he absolutely will not touch the finish on an original Peacemaker. Before he will restore a Colt's finish, it has to have been refinished in the past sometime. To me that shows a fine sense of respect for these historical old guns.

Modifications For Shooters

Janis started competing in the cowboy action shooting sport as early as 1986 and began doing business as Peacemaker Specialists in 1991. For most of his adult life Janis has been a competition shooter of one sort or another. He started as a bullseye pistol shooter and then progressed to IPSC style competition. Then, like so many of us old-gun lovers, he was drawn to cowboy action shooting. With such shooting experience behind him, it was no wonder that I was impressed with his grouping ability there at Thunder Ranch!

(Continued on Next Page)

Photos By Todd Lafgren

Eddie Janis of Peacemaker Specialists is solely devoted to restoring and modifying Colt SAA revolvers.

For the Peacemaker shooter Janis offers several attractive "packages." One example is the Cowboy Shooter's 1880's Package for 3rd Generation SAAs in which the barrel markings are changed to match early Colts, the cylinder flutes and ejector rod end are beveled, the hammer is color-casehardened, and other parts besides the frame are rust blued. One or all of the above options can be picked to dress up a new Colt like an old one. Prices range from $20 to bevel the ejector rod tube end to $150 for color-casehardening the frame and hammer.

Cowboy action shooting is a "speed" shooting sport. Most competitors cock the hammer smartly with the weak hand's thumb while operating the trigger with the strong hand. Such use is very hard on the internals of a stock Peacemaker. Janis offers two action modification packages for Peacemakers to make them stand up to constant hard use. One is called the "Saddle Tramp" ($125). This action job lightens the hammer tension, makes for a crisp trigger pull of approximately four pounds, and deburrs all internals. Custom mainsprings and trigger/bolt springs are installed. The other action job offered is called the "Gunslinger" ($175). In addition to the above work the gun's owner can specify exact trigger pull, softer springs are used, and all parts are given a glass-smooth finish.

It is worth noting that Janis himself does all this action work on Peacemakers. He said, "I could hire some assistants and reduce the waiting time involved, but I am extremely particular and treat each customer's gun on a one-on-one basis. Instead of having standard operations that I perform on all guns, each one is given attention in the specific areas where it needs it."

On a personal note, I have had Janis do the "Gunslinger" package to SAAs for my wife and me, and I've never handled smoother Peacemakers. Try as I might, I cannot get one to lock up improperly regardless of how hard that hammer is slammed rearwards.

The special "softer" springs sets are offered as separate items by Janis, but he cautions buyers that they should only be installed by a qualified gunsmith. Otherwise, the result can be a revolver whose timing is off or whose trigger is too light for safety.

Unique Alterations & Custom Touches

Another service offered by Peacemaker Specialists is caliber conversion work. The Colt SAA is probably the easiest revolver to convert from one caliber to another because the barrel and cylinder are the only parts that need alteration. And Janis offers a wide range of barrels in all calibers and lengths (selection and prices vary by availability) for conversion work. When I asked him what replacement barrel was most popular he replied, "The 4 $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch length in .45 caliber, but we are getting many requests from cowboy action shooters for .38 Special/.357 Magnum barrels and cylinders. Colt would do well to listen to that demand and reintroduce the Peacemaker in .357 Magnum."

